

WBB Achieves Real-Time Project Visibility with New Integrated Project Management System

As a medium-large government contractor, WBB's expertise in strategic planning, enterprise architecture development, sustainment planning, and managing organizational change helps clients in the Federal Government and Department of Defense manage and program their resources to achieve the best value.

Whitney, Bradley & Brown, Inc. required a system that would give them access to role-based information in real-time. They wanted a system to allow their teams to complete work on-time and on budget, while giving management the visibility needed to make well informed business decisions.

CHALLENGES

- Required increased visibility on project status, real-time reporting by sector, type, and profitability
- Needed the ability to manage numerous small, unique projects simultaneously
- Maintain limitations on salary-related data using a role-based system
- Required a system capable of managing multiple organizations with different cost structures
- Needed access to data analysis for accounting functions
- Wanted to eliminate dependency on Excel and Excel-based tools
- Maintain a role-based system Setup allowed for few controls on who can charge to which projects

WBB is a company of many talents and vast experience spanning the life cycle of acquisition and program support, capabilities development and analysis, mission performance, technology, and engineering.
